Description
The local home page would be set as the default, likely contain the icon for Privacy Browser, and would not invoke any network traffic. It could be programmed to display when the URL is empty. Users, of course, could set the default home page to be whatever they like. This would separate Privacy Browser a bit from DuckDuckGo, which is, I think, a good direction to go.

Obviously, I have already separated Privacy Browser from DuckDuckGo, as described at <https://www.stoutner.com/new-default-homepage-and-search-engine/>.

This feature will also include settings for how new tabs are handled. Something along the lines of having the local homepage open for all new tabs, using a user specified homepage for all tabs, or having secondary tabs open blank, like they now do.
